respectively. I will not occupy your space with an extended notice of the discussion between them, but will content myself by saying that the first-named was plain, forcible and unanswerable—fortified bebind an array of facts which were insurmiuntable, he portrayed the revolutionary deal gas of radicalism with a truth to nature such as I have rarely heard. He left no room to doubt that to place the white and black races in this country on the same plane, is the deliberate purpose of radicalism. Charged and proved that the cry of Union which they raise is a false one: that they are disunionists, and have destroyed the Union. He appealed to the Federal soldier to know for what he fought, and if the objects for which he fought—the Union under the Constitution—bad not been frustated by radicalism, which view he sustained fully ny presenting a retrospect of the past six years.

nem, which view he sustained fully by pre-senting a retrospect of the past six years. Throughout, his speech was pronounced by the Democracy just the thing for the times, and it was highly satisfactory to every one not hopelessly radical. Colonel Adams replied, but failed to please any one. I don't think he satisfied himself. He met none of Mr. Dawson's positions, admitted his party was for ne-gro suffrage, attempted to justify every-thing Congress has done, in short, made just such a speech—barring the ability—

s one would look for from Thad. Stevens just such a speech barriag as one would look for from Thad. Stevens. The day's work was a good one for the Democracy. Let Adams and Dawson speak in every county in the State and the Democratic majority will be 100,000. In the next Legislature the mountains of Kentucky will present almost a solid Democratic front.

The Supreme Executive authority of the nation is ignored, and the execution of the laws placed in the hands of district commanders, under the General of the Armies of the United States? The casual reader may be imposed upon by the plea that this provision is applicable only to the States lately in rebellion—but all the adjuncts to this proceeding must be taking into view. Consul, when for the first time the intelligence was received of the disaster which had befallen Dr. Livingstone.

From the accounts of these Johanna men it would seem that the expedition reached Lake Nyassa in safety and crossed the lake. They pushed on westward, and in the course of some time reached Goomany, a fishing village on a river. This would appear to have been on the second or third week of August last. The people of Goomany warned Dr. Livingstone that the Mafites, n wandering predatory tribe, were cut on a plundering expedition, and that it would not be safe to continue the journey. But the dangers thus presented to view were not sufficient to deter a man who had braved so many before; and, treating the warnings as but of slight moment, he crossed the river in canoes the next morning, with his baggage and train of followers, in safety. Previously to this time the whole of the baggage animals had perished on the pourney from the want of water, and an reaching the further rite of the miserable faction calling itself a Congress is to perpetnate its power by excluding all adverse elements of sufficient numerical or moral strength to check the onward course of fanatical insanity? The recent proceedings in the case of the Kentucky delegation need only the men tion to sustain the indictment. To resist quences. If the Legislatures of the States reflect in their action the sentiments of a "republican" form of government must be guaranteed to such States. Already Kentucky, Delaware and Maryland are summoned before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives to answer if they need the fostering care of be decided that the forms of government and on reaching the further side of the river the baggaye had to be carried by the doctor's men. Being a fast walker, Dr. Livingstone kept some distance in advance of the baggage-encumbered men, and Moosa only, or Moosa and a few others of the party, kept up with him.

The march had continued some distance, when Dr. Livingstone saw three armed men ahead, and thereupon he called out to Moosa: "The three Matites are out, after all," or some such words as those; and these seem to be the last he uttered. The three Maties were armed with bows and arrows and other weapons, in those States are not "republican," will the others now in process of reconstruc-The learned doctors would not so stultify themselves as to prescribe a different remedy for the same disease, espeaially when the medicine is already prepared. Being called to this place yesterday on business, and finding that a very large crowd of people had assembled to hear the political questions of the day discussived, I repaired with the mass to the Courthouse, where the day was mainly spent in public speaking.

The forenoon was occupied by the Legislative candidates—John M. Rice, Esq., Democratic, and Major Burchett, radical. In this discussion the thing was all on our side. Major Burchett cannot even make a respectable radical speech, while only requires abuse of rebels, whilst Mr. Rice is one of the finest speakers it has been my pleasure to hear for a great whils the is a rising man, andought to rise. WASHINGTON, July 22. The President nominated Mr Greeley for the Austrian Mission without consulting Mr. Greeley. Every member is said to have favored the confirmation but one, Mr. Tipton, of Nebraska, who refused to Mr. Tipton, of Nebraska, who relused to , take np the matter because Mr. Greeley eigned the bail bond of Jeff. Davis and denonnced Maximilian's execution. All the colleagues of Mr. Tipton, Republican and Democratic, entreated him to yield a consent to the consideration of the nomination, but in vain. Mr. Greeley's name, therefore, will have to be sent in again part session. next session.

The fame of Juarez soon agread throughout the whole country, and in 1837 he was elected President of the National Supreme Court, while Ignacio Commonfort at the same election obtained a large majority for President of the Republic. He appointed Juarez Miuister of Justice, and as such he soon gave ample proofs of the rectinde of this principles and his respect for the majesty of the law. When Commonfort, in 1835, made his unfortunate conp d'etat, and abrogated the Constitution. Juarez opposed this measure se amreservedly that he was thrown into prison. Commonfort, however, soon found ont that the Liberally abandoned his cause—that the clericals tried to become master of the situation, and that by his crime he had committed a grave political mistake. He released Juarez from prison, surrendered to him as President of the Supreme Court, in accordance with the letter of the Constitution he had costablished, the office of the Presidency, and left the country with the saidened consciousness of having once more plunged it into a civil war. Since then, Juarez has acted as President of the Republic, first provisional, but since 1830 elected in accordance with the Constitution.

He took charge of the Government under the most trying and difficult circumstances; was forced to brave the greatest dangers; and no other l'resident has devoted his energy—nay, even his blood, with more zeal and ardor to his country than Juarez did. It is not our intention here to write his history as President of Mexico, but rather to give a pen sketch of his person. He is rather under middle size, like all men of his race, well built, and inclining to embonpoint. The color of his skin is that of his tribe—lighter than that of other Indians; his face bears the type of the Zapoteks—small forehead marked cheek bones; the nose sharply bent and broad; a large most, adorned with sound and snow white teeth, and displaying a friendly smile, even in the midst of the most responsible and pressing business. The eye shows a great deal of intelligence, is unnaually lively and telling—black, under black eyebrows. His black, plain hair is interspersed with a little whitish. His voice is soft, almost lamenting, but clear and sonorous; his prorfunctation firm and explicit. His suit of clothes consists of a plain coat, silk evet and colored pents; only on special occasions he wears the black coat.

This is the exterior of the man who, led by perseverance and confidence in the instead. on. He took charge of the Government un-
